Uncle Zeke and Hulda

Visit the Stores

Everybody on the farm is talking Dollar Day in Norway. The merchants' circular arrived in our mail box Monday and Hulda is on her toes with excitement. Picking and canning are neglected. Even the city boarders have fallen in line and the female portion consult with witely on this and that advertised by the Norway storekeepers. Sartin sure, stuff is going up and "peers to me this event next Saturday is the best opportunity to make hay while the sun shines. The circular tells about mighty good discounts below regular low prices, so "Believe it or not, Ripley," your old uncle and aunt advise stepping out for a money-saver on Aug. 26. The who's here of us are to take advantage of this sale, so says Hulda, ditto says the boarders and naturally I follow the home team.

We drove to the village Tuesday and piloted a couple of guests around the stores for advanced information. Ashton was getting fixed up for Saturday. He told us about the free banana split or ice cream soda to be passed out to customers. A fountain syringe and water bottle came in the package. The price of one. Popular novels marked from 75c to $2.00 go for 19c each, 3 for 50c. Land sakes, bargains are everywhere in the store and account on Dollar Day, covering almost the entire range. Pretty good idea to lunch here for the girls with Peley's help can put up a lobster salad or sandwich that's a revelation.

Zeke Morehead has a large stock of dry goods ready for the Dollar Day rush. Summer dresses will be sacrificed to make room for cool weather garments. He explained his plan on Saturday will be a store-wide sale with discounts at 10, 25, 33 1/3 and 50% under present low values. Probably replacements cannot be made at such low prices. Just now, the advance has not greatly affected this store and Dollar Day will bring out the trades even prudent shopper will appreciate. Perhaps this may be the last chance to save a few dollars on certain articles before the inevitable advance arrives. That's Hulda's forecast and I know she's generally right.

Over at the L. F. Pike Co., we found stocks being arranged for quick work on Dollar Day. They are offering 10 per cent discounts on suits, shirts, ties, and with low prices for overcoats, fitted by the tailor, at no extra charge. Underwear has thus far escaped the upward climb and low prices will prevail. Look out for next winter when the money goes down, the cost of underwear will certainly creep up. That's my warning and Hulda is not responsible for this flash of wisdom. Everything is about the same in men's furnishings. Hugh Johnson, Director of the N. R. A., in his recent radio talk, said, "Nobody needs to wait to buy—the longer you wait, the higher price you're apt to pay." With raw cotton and wool now advanced 50-60 per cent, and with the cost of underwear will certainly creep up. That's my warning and Hulda is not responsible for this flash of wisdom.
